

BLUEPRENT (Recidivism)

Overview

The BLUEPRENT is undoubtedly the most complete recidivism solution in the market today, whether a juvenile facility is seeking an accredited GED program or a prison is trying to bridge the gaps prior to release for people with physical, mental, and emotional disabilities to learn (or relearn) the necessary skills to reintegrate into society and better support and care for themselves.

Statistics

- i. 77% of the inmates released are likely to be re-arrested within five years.
- ii. Recently released prisoners experience higher mortality rates as compared to the general public.
- iii. Criminal history and race influence the possibility of a person receiving a job interview.
- iv. Individuals with low skills have a higher possibility of having a criminal record.

What We Do

- i. Empower current and former incarcerated people to thrive by offering opportunities, comprehensive services, and support networks to advocate for policy change.
- ii. Keep individuals out of the criminal justice system by offering programs that enhance social and financial knowledge to young adults who have been referred to court.
- iii. Provide accurate information that exposes the harm of mass criminalization and advocate for justice in society.
- iv. Contextualize and synthesize data to help policymakers implement and enact major reforms that address challenges of criminal justice, many of which intersect with systems such as education, housing, and health.
- v. Provide ex-convicts, drug addicts, and gang members with skills to secure jobs and provide them with an education that will make employment possible.
